Exports to China: Raw inputs dominate supplies, restrict growth prospects intermediate goods such as low-grade iron & steel, chemicals and copper were shipped to China in large volumes last fiscal. However, being the world's largest producer of capital and consumer goods, Beijing doesn't really import these products - where value addition can be substantial - from

Raw materials, mainly iron ore, cotton and plastics, and

New Delhi. In fact, it dominates the global export market in these segments, and remains way ahead of India. As such, New Delhi's ability to supply to Beijing at cheaper rates than the local producers there has long remained stunted due to inherent structural weaknesses including high logistics costs. On top of that, China's stubborn denial of credible market access in goods segments where Indian producers are competitive, often through the employment of non-tariff barriers, have long tilted bilateral trade balance in Beijing's favour. Relying on just raw materials and intermediate goods is unlikely to push up India's exports to China year after year. New Delhi has to capture markets there in highvalue segments by sorting out legacy issues and removing structural obstacles. As such, growth in exports of raw materials and intermediate goods greatly hinges on global commodity prices and it tends to lose steam as the prices go down. Importantly, while China has been vacating export space in labour-intensive sectors due to rising wage costs,

> India hasn't been able to capitalise on it, losing out to competitors like Vietnam. According to former chief economic advisor Arvind Subramanian, China has vacated close to $150 billion in exports in low-skilled labourintensive sectors, including apparel, leather and footwear since the global financial crisis in 2008-09. But India has cornered at most 10-15% of the vacated > market. India has also not been able to quite cash in on a trade war between the US and China, partly due to the outbreak of the Covid-19 pandemic.

Panel seeks Twitter's response over locking of Prasad, Tharoor accounts

Twitter denied Prasad access to his account '@rsprasad' for almost an hour on the grounds that he violated the US Digital Millennium Copyright Act, but the minister said the microblogging platform violated new IT rules that require intermediary or a host of user content to give prior notice before locking access. The IT minister called out Twitter over the brazen arbitrariness and running its "own agenda".

Soon after Prasad flagged the issue, Congress leader Shashi Tharoor tweeted that he too had faced something similar.

"Raviji, the same thing just happened to me. Clearly DMCA is getting hyperactive. This tweet has been deleted by @Twitter because its video includes the copyrighted BoneyM song 'Rasputin'," Tharoor tweeted.

Tharoor further said: "As Chairman of the Parliamentary Standing Committee on Information Technology, I can state that we will be seeking an explanation from @TwitterIndia for the locking of @rsprasad's & my accounts & the rules & procedures they follow while operat ing in India".

Prasad lashed out at Twitter and in a series of posts on rival social media platform Koo said it was apparent that his statements calling out the "high handedness and arbitrary actions" of Twitter, had ruffled feathers.

Antitrust case dismissed, Facebook hits $1-trillion value for first time

A bright spot for the FTC in the opinion was the judge's saying that the agency was "on firmer ground in scrutinising the acquisitions of Instagram and WhatsApp, as the court rejects Facebook's argument that the FTC lacks authority to seek injunctive relief against those purchases". The FTC and a big group of states filed separate lawsuits last year that accused Facebook of breaking antitrust law to keep smaller competitors at bay by snapping up rivals, such as Instagram for $1 billion and WhatsApp for $19 billion. The federal government and states filed a total of five lawsuits against Facebook and Alphabet Inc's Google last year following bipartisan outrage over their social media clout in the economy and the political sphere.
